Manifesto
Tudor Finaru

Coming to Edinburgh, I was eager to experience university life outside of the academic side of my degree. As an Informatics student, I thought that CompSoc would be the perfect platform to do this; after being here for a few weeks, I am certain of it.

Navigating this new landscape can be tricky for every fresher. A lot of people would benefit from having a group of like-minded people, and most of us share a passion for technology, in all its various forms.

As a first year rep, I would like to insist on this sense of community that can form around CompSoc. Every student should feel encouraged to get involved, to participate in events, and to take advantage of the fantastic opportunities at our disposal. Looking towards the future, our society will only grow and prosper as a result of this – we need to be smart in attracting people who can take something out of CompSoc, while also giving back by contributing to the community. It's a win-win scenario.

I myself am willing to lead by example and be an active contributor. I look forward to doing a lot of great things together!
